Indiana Jones vs. The Boy from the Stars

There once was a boy named Elliot, who once thought the sky was his friend.

is now older

weathered

and he followed the spirit wherever he went

One night,

During one of his hikes

the Lord began to whisper.

A hum rose from the wilderness, calling him out of the house he lived into the Mountains behind the town.

And Elliot

not having a single clue on where he was going

he followed anyway

the spirit led him downwards

There, under a pale moon, he found a empty cave breathing with light.

Inside the walls glowed faintly, like stars trapped in stone.

He stepped closer and closer and behold

he had found something wonderful a remarkable Crystal

the shard was so beautiful that it glimmered beyond the stars of any human eye and Elliot heard his voice again

He said,

“The treasure you sought is not yours to keep.”

And the boy trembled,

for he knew someone else was already hunting it.

Far across the desert,

a man rode beneath the same moon.

His name

was Indiana Jones.

He had heard the legends of the world a crystal buried before Eden, shards of heaven fallen to earth.

that reveals the next step to discover the Garden of Eden

which was never destroyed only hidden

somewhere on the earth

Indiana rode his horse with ambition the could be his last treasure before he would retire to own the proof that Garden of Eden was real to the world

He carried a map and a pistol for those who stood in his way.

———

By dawn,

he reached the hill

where the boy Elliot had wandered.

He saw footprints small as sparrow tracks and light bleeding through the sand.

He called to his men,

“There! Dig!”

and The ground opened like a wound.

deep inside,

Elliot stood before The Living Crystal.

It shone like shimmering glass,

Indiana froze.

“Kid,”

“Hand it over.” Jones said

The boy shook his head.

“I cannot give it to you,” he said softly.

He turned and walked toward the edge of the pit, and before the soldiers could reach him, he let the crystal fall back into the earth.

and then the Lord shined light blinded Indiana and his men then Elliot

ran out the cave

as fast as he could

the Cave started to crumble

Jones reached out his hand quickly to pick up the Crystal

but it was too late

it had been buried within the collide he told his men

“DIG NOW

DIG”

then the men said

“but This place is Crumbling apart we have to leave now before we DIE” then Jones grabbed his pistol and yelled

“I said DIG!”

The men dug with trembling hands, spilling like time through their fingers.

The cave groaned above them—stones cracking,

dust falling.

Indiana shouted,

“Faster! The crystal’s still in there!”

They obeyed for a moment, but the earth had already made its choice.

The walls shuddered.

Rocks began to roll and pile.

A slab broke loose, crashing down behind them.

and Jones stumbled down

The light that once guided him was gone.

“Help me!” he yelled.

The men had tried

but the rocks fell before they could reach him only the leather hint of his hat was what remained

The men rushed out and the cave sealed itself like a tomb.

They ran until the mountain swallowed the sound.

Outside, the dawn was quiet.

The earth rested.

And Elliot

far from the chaos

saw from a distance

the men heading back onto their horses without their leader in charge

Elliot gasps

and realized who was left behind he rushed back home alone tired, weary, with grief wondering why he was led to see such a thing

That night,

Elliot sat alone by his window.

The wind still carried the dust of the cave.

He looked up at the stars—the same light that once shimmered in the crystal.

And he finally understood.

The crystal was never the treasure.

It was only a mirror
